MANY EMPLOYES OF FIRM IN FIRE-FIGHTING BRIGADE

Hydraulic Press Company's Stable at Arlington Junction Scene of Blaze. Hay and Straw Burn.

Fire in the stable of the Hydraulic Press Brick Company, near Arlington Junction, Va., this morning burned much of the roof of the big structure and destroyed a quantity of hay and straw. It was between 8 and 9 o'clock when Joseph Freeman, one of the stable employes, discovered the fire on the second floor of the building and sounded an alarm.

More than 200 employes of the firm formed a fire-fighting brigade and hurried to the building. With a good supply of water on the premises the men were enabled to keep the flames fairly well in check until the arrival of an automobi fire apparatus from No. 16 engine con pany, and while many of them were fighting the fire others were saving hay and straw from one end of the structure. straw from one end of the structure.

It is thought the fire resulted from spontaneous combustion. It started in part of the old building which is protected from the new addition by a fire wall and metal doors, and in the new portion of the building the men were able to save what hay and straw was stored there.

The building is 200 feet long and 75 feet wide, but only a portion of it was ruined by the flames. The loss, it is believed, will amount to several thousand dollars.
